UK Outlook for Monday 6 Dec 2021 to Monday 20 Dec 2021:
A generally northwesterly airflow looks set to continue for much of this period, with the most changeable conditions likely to be in the north of the UK. Showers or longer spells of rain and possibly strong winds are likely across the north, become increasingly likely further north, these interspersed with periods of more settled weather. In the south high pressure is likely to remain close by, giving a good deal of settled and dry weather. Temperatures will be varied overall with longer mild spells being punctuated by shorter colder spells, with some wintry weather also possible with a risk of snow and ice in the north. During any clear, calm spells, overnight frost and fog are likely.
